On 5 July 1951 TIAN Chen-lin, chairman of the Chekiang provincial government and political commissar of the Chekiang Military District called a meeting of Chinese Communist military and political cadres at the People's Hall in Hangchow at which he spoke on the Korean cease-fire talks. The gist of his speech was as follows:

- a. The United Nations forces have been beaten badly by the Korean and Chinese Communist troops, and this, along with the pressure of people from various nations for peace, is one of the reasons for the cease-fire talks.
- b. The cease-fire talks to take place between 10 and 15 July are a first step toward solving the Korean problem, and the success of the talks depends on the sincerity of the United States and the other countries which have participated in the war.
- c. The Chinese Communists want to solve the Korean problem, but until a truce is reached their troops must continue to fight. Therefore, it is necessary to continue to push the movement for the purchase of airplanes and guns in order to consolidate national defense.
- d. Because imperialists are constantly planning to invade China, it is necessary to continue to push various patriotic movements for strengthening national defense and the economy in order to be able to repel an invasion and protect and safeguard peace in the Far East.
